A Selection of Pictures

Hercules Brabazon Brabazon NEAC PS

(1821–1906)

Inspired by the work of artists such as Velázquez and Turner, Hercules Brabazon Brabazon was a forerunner of the so-called 'British Impressionist' movement. His work was years ahead of its time so much so that the eminent critic John Ruskin described him as "our finest watercolourist since Turner". A friend of Monet's, whose work influenced him, he, in turn, influenced the work of John Singer Sargent and Philip Wilson Steer amongst many others.

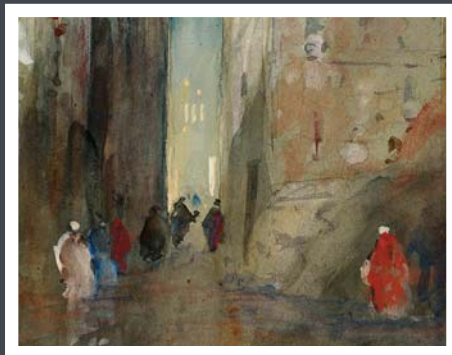

Brabazon's watercolours are strongly composed and possess harmonious colour and balance. Often highly impressionistic and yet resolving into focus from a distance, Brabazon once said that his works should not be viewed from closer than seven feet. To this day, his watercolours remain as modern in approach and execution as any of the leading twentieth century British watercolourists.

We have put together this collection of pictures that we feel capture his abilities as an impressionist painter completely in control of his subject matter.
